JUNE 2016

Editor's Column

Energy conservation can be a significant area of cost saving. In recent years, developing our own sources of water in different areas of the course has been part of this effort. In addition to beautifying the landscape, strategically placed water hazards make the course more challenging.

I can recall how my father made the family more conscious about saving electricity. He would compare the latest monthly bill versus the previous month. If there was a saving, the difference was given as additional pocket money. However, if there was an increase in the amount charged, the difference would be deducted from our monthly allowances.

Simple acts of switching off lights / fan when vacating the locker room, or consciously trying to avoid wasting water can help lower our utility bills. There are many instances where I have entered an empty golf bag locker room but found the lights and fan to be switched on. Just because we do not pay the utility bills ourselves does not mean that we have no part to play in helping CGC in cost reduction efforts.

Note: Placards are displayed at the doors informing members to switch off the light and fan.

Bits & Pieces from the Club Manager's Desk

Goodwill, Generosity, and Graciousness

After the new clubhouse opened its doors in 1992, the Cove (karaoke lounge) became a popular hangout for members as it was the only air-conditioned room with bar counter service. There was karaoke (using the cumbersome laser disc) with a part-time DJ in attendance.

Patronage was good during weekday evenings. On most weekends and public holidays, only standing room could be found. Beers and whiskies were in abundance and, in true Changian tradition, any opened bottle was an invitation to drink. It has been repeated over conversations that macho Changians of the past era would throw the bottle caps into the sea to ensure that the spiritual contents were emptied before calling it a night. Today, the same macho but balding Changians would keep an extra cap in their pockets, just in case.

The Cove's decades-old bar counter is still attached. In its heyday, bottles of various sizes and shapes, displaying the members' names and numbers, would sit proudly on its shelves. I recall that some bottles have shorter shelf life, especially those belonging to members whose names were on every member's lips. Our friendly bar tender was ever ready to pour for anyone in the house. Maybe that was where and when the word 'house pour' was coined. The bar tender would then inform the affected members that:

"... (name of person) drank from your bottle". On many occasions, a bottle lost was a friend gained.

Operators at public pubs and bars have to be accountable for their customers' bottles and are usually very capable in keeping track of the bottle. Of course, lapses may sometimes occur resulting in bottles being lost or misplaced. The reaction of patrons to such mistakes separate the men from the boys, and distinguish those with graciousness from the uncouth.

At many public institutions, a sign is displayed at the receptionist counter with the following message:

"MUTUAL RESPECT. Our employees deserve respect. We will not tolerate verbal or physical abuse of any kind. Offenders will be reported to the police."

Public institutions, like hospitals, have to deal daily with the public. Unfortunately, some people who may be upset or unhappy with service received, can subject employees to high level of stress through abusive and arrogant behavior.

At clubs, rules and regulations are in place to manage members, employees and others. There is no necessity to throw tantrums or use abusive words. Respect begets respect.
